C., his present home; many years trustee of Kenyon Coll., as well as of Western Reserve Univ.; he is still a trustee of Trinity Coll.; he recalls vividly the disputes which arose at Harvard Law School, between Northern and Southern students over the question of slavery, and so heated were these disputes that the subject was barred from the Parliament as it was known; many subterfuges were brought out in winter of 1855-56 in order to bring the question up for debate but in all cases it was detected and ruled out; among the enactments which Mr. Boardman was successful in having enacted was one creating a special court to determine the boundaries of the canal lands in the city of Cleveland. On this bench was an ex-chief justice of the State (the father of Justice Day of the U. S. Supreme court), and an ex-judge of the court of common pleas and a civil engineer. The result was after a few months session most of the lands claimed by the State for canal purposes, but occupied by abutting owners, was decided to belong to the State. Mr. Boardman was married to Florence Sheffield, of New Haven, Conn., who bore him three sons and three daughters; present address, Washington, D. C.
